Alberto Pérez-Gómez was born in Mexico City in 1949, where he studied architecture and practiced. He did postgraduate work at Cornell University, and was awarded an M.A. and a Ph.D. by the University of Essex (England). He has taught at universities in Mexico, Houston, Syracuse, Toronto, and at London’s Architectural Association. In 1983 he became Director of Carleton University’s School of Architecture. He has lectured extensively around the world and is the author of numerous articles published in major periodicals and books. He is also co-editor of a well-known series of books entitled CHORA: Intervals in the Philosophy of Architecture.

In January 1987 he was appointed Bronfman Professor of Architectural History at McGill University, where he chairs the History and Theory Post-Professional (Master’s and Doctoral) Programs.
